When Beyoncé smiled at Susan Monaghan, as the singer lingered in the hallway at a New York hotel the night before the Grammys, a sudden feeling came over the Shrewsbury resident’s body.

“I swear,” Monaghan said, “I felt like I was hugged by an angel.”

She also went into shock — and a picture of her reaction shows it.

Beyoncé posted a series of photographs from the big event this week to her official Instagram account. One picture showed Monaghan, her mouth agape, eyes bulging, as Beyoncé and her husband, Jay-Z, pass through the Sheraton New York Times Square hotel, holding hands.

The image has since gone viral, garnering more than 4 million “likes” on the Grammy Award-winning singer’s account, and a slew of reactions from fans who said they can relate to Monaghan’s look of complete and utter astonishment in the presence of Queen Bey.

“I think it’s hysterical,” Monaghan said during a telephone interview about the picture. “Strange things happen to me.”

Monaghan said she was in New York City with her family last weekend for her granddaughter’s gymnastics competition and to celebrate the birthday of her daughter, Jenn Hiitt. It was pure coincidence that the family was staying in a hotel where celebrities were gathering for a weekend of events related to the annual music award ceremony.

Monaghan’s run-in with the influential power couple began like this, she said: After returning to the hotel from dinner in the city, she decided to take the elevator up to her room on the eighth floor while some of her relatives stayed in the lobby.
